Shepherd's Pie: Family Business, Recession & Recovery. The Real Story George Mordaunt

Since the start of the recession in Ireland, the public has been infuriated by reports of self-serving bankers, developers and government ministers, but little has been reported about the personal trauma and the devastating effect of this crisis on Irish-owned businesses and the hard-working people trying to keep them going. George Mordaunt believes that many Irish businesses are now in trouble not only because of the recession, but because of the response of business owners to the recession. With raw honesty he outlines the effect that this recession has had on him, his young family, his marriage and his business. He shares his most private moments of despair and fear, yet provides a story of hope by demonstrating how things can be turned around when the situation is at its bleakest.
